THE BEST

"The Best is Yet to Come!"

So the proclamation goes in the Utah Stars advertising campaign for the upcoming 1973-74 season and while the club's management is positive it can live up to this promise to its fans, that doesn't in any way mean that the past three years have been unproductive.

The exact opposite is the case. The Stars won their second consecutive regular-season western division title in 1972-73 and with a 55-29 won-lost record became the first ABA franchise ever to compile three straight seasons with 50 or more victories in regular-season play, 60 or more with playoff competition included.

The Utahns were 57-27 in 1970-71 when they captured the ABA championship and 60-24 in 1971-72. With a mark of 25-14 in the playoffs in three years, the Stars overall won-lost standard since commencing play in the fall of 1970 stands at an excellent 197 victories and only 94 defeats for a super .677 percentage.

Were it not for the pesky Indiana Pacers who for two straight years now have eliminated the Stars in the playoff divisional finals, it is conceivable the Utah franchise could have a dynasty going.

The Pacers, who defeated the Stars in 1971-72 in seven games in the western finals en route to the ABA crown, in 1972-73 upended the Utahns in six games, the real decider being the fifth game in Salt Lake when the Pacers eked out a 104-102 win.

The Utah-Indiana rivalry has to be the closest in all of sport. Since the Stars have been in the Beehive State the two clubs have met 55 times with the Stars winning 28 and the Pacers 27. Had a running score been kept it would read Stars 6188, Pacers 6187, or a difference of a single point!

So as the 1973-74 season rolls around and teams throughout the ABA are singing the praises for touted rookies signed and trades made in their favor, don't rule out the Utah-Indiana scraps which for three consecutive years have decided the league championship.

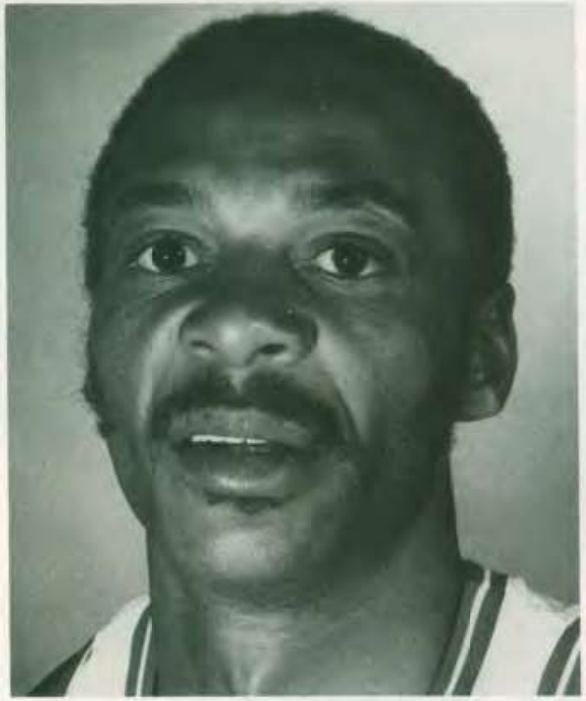
ZELMO BEATY



Statistics often are as exciting as a platter of mush for breakfast. There are exceptions, particularly when you toss a batch of "stats" into a computer labeled Zelmo Beaty.

The machine either blows a fuse or gives out with a long, low whistle. There have been few others in the same category. You get the idea . . . an athlete who reached the plateau that only a handful attained.

Item: When Zelmo Beaty hit the medium-range jumper last Jan. 19 to become only the 21st man in the history of professional basketball to reach the 15,000 point total in career scoring, it was a superb accomplishment.

Item: Zelmo Beaty scored an unbelievable 63 points against the Pittsburgh Condors Feb. 21, 1972. It set a new ABA individual game scoring record. What made the feat even more unusual is that Beaty is not a gunner. He takes his shots when available but is content to pass off and play team basketball.

Item: At an early date in the 1973-74 ABA season Zelmo Beaty should haul down a vital rebound. It will be rebound number 10,000. He will become only the 12th player in the history of pro basketball to reach that figure.

Beaty ranks second to Kentucky's Artis Gilmore as the all-time best percentage shooter in the ABA, having hit on 54 per cent of his field goal casts during his three seasons in the league.

Undoubtedly one of the top free-throw shooting big men playing in the game, if not the absolute best, Beaty has hit over 80 per cent from the charity stripe during his three years with the Stars and is just under that norm for his entire 10-year pro career.

Big Z's name appears prominently in the Stars' record book. He holds no less than 44 team records, 19 regular season and 25 playoff marks.

The figures are impressive, but what is even more impressive about Zelmo is his worth to the club as a leader on and off the court.

The smooth, stylish center has been around a long time. He's played in 850 play-for-pay games (743 regular-season contests, 102 playoff battles and five all-star classics), and he's done it in spite of playing on arthritic knees which have undergone surgery six times. Toss in the 100,000 miles of travel each year and you get the feeling that there might be an easier way to make a living . . . like pro football!

WILLIE WISE

Okay, all you sports experts . . . let's have the names of the top six forwards in professional basketball. Toss in the brown ball league if you wish.

The names that come up most often are McGinnis, Erving, Cunningham, Haywood, Havlicek, DeBusschere.

But one voter goes so far as to label Willie Wise of the Utah Stars as "the best forward alive." He had some working knowledge of what he was talking about. He's LaDell Andersen, who coached Willie for a couple of seasons.

The object of all this adulation isn't too impressed with the accolades. Murmured the quick and nimble Stars' forward when appraised of his ranking: "When you look at guys like Erving, McGinnis or Havlicek, you look at the greatest. I'm just a guy out there making an effort to just stay in the ballpark!"

Wise doesn't pay much attention to reputations. You'd figure a guy like Willie would come into his fourth season with the attitude of a superstar. Instead, Wise approaches the season with the fervor of a rookie trying to make the club.

"I had an operation on my knee during the off-season," claims the pride of San Francisco, "and I figured I'd better get the weight down this year. I'm going to play at 200 or 205 this season. With all these muscle guys around, I'm going to be quick. I want to get out of the way!"

The stress is on defense this year under new Stars' coach Joe Mullaney and nothing could be better as far as Wise is concerned. "I like to play defense," crows Willie, "and we will win it with our defense this year. You can't play 84 games and expect your shots to fall every night, but you can expect a top defensive effort every single game."

Speaking of defense, how do you stop a Julius Erving? "You don't really stop a Julius Erving," chuckles the happy-go-lucky Wise. "You hope . . . you hope he doesn't want to play that night . . . you hope he doesn't want to score 35 or 40 . . . you hope he doesn't want to turn on the crowd. If you come up a bit short on speed and quickness I think you'd better just sit down and pray that Doctor J just doesn't want to play that night."

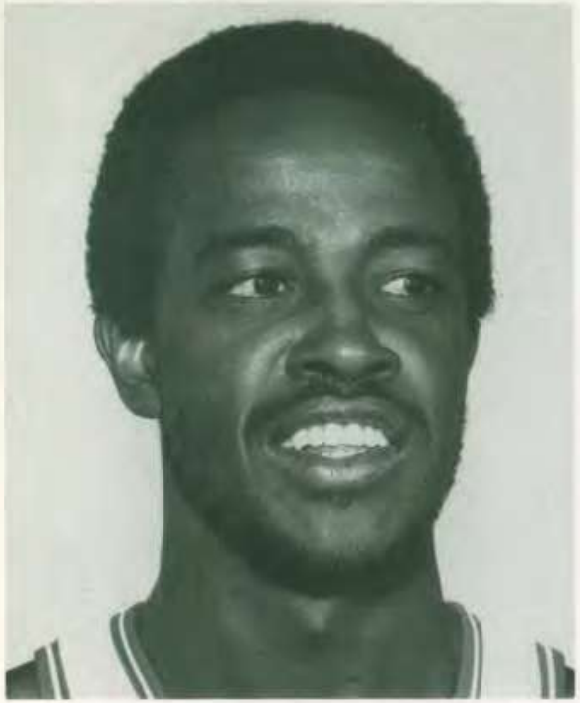
Any particular goals for Willie Wise this year? "Not individually," answers the Wondrous One, "just one overall goal. I want to win the championship. I think for the past two years we've been cheated out of a title because of a bad break . . . a fluke play or a bad call. I want to prove that we can win. I think we can."

JAMES JONES



"I just want to be the best guard in the American Basketball Association."

Those are not idle words. They were spoken by James Jones of the Utah Stars. He has the talent to turn the trick. It's all a matter of physical condition.

"I had a tough year last season," elaborates the tall, 6-4 guard out of the state of Louisiana. "I had a bone spur that just about ruined my game the last half of the season. An off-season operation has taken care of the problem. Now the rest is up to me."

The lithe all-pro performer continued: "I had a problem cutting the last half of the season last winter and it affected by shooting. There's no doubt that the problem hurt me and the club in the playoffs."

What does JJ expect from new coach Joe Mullaney this year? "He has a solid philosophy on defense that will help us a great deal, especially against Indiana and Kentucky," says Jimmy. "It's radically different from last year so we have to change our way of thinking on the defensive end of the court. But I think it will go just fine all year. We are a smart, veteran team. I think we'll be in it all year long."

If Jones is right, the Stars have to be one of the prime favorites for the ABA title. Jones claims his goal is to be the best guard in the league. Even playing hurt, Jimmy is close to that level. He was the first Utah player to win all-ABA laurels in three seasons last year. A healthy Jones bears a striking resemblance to Walt Frazier. There just aren't too many guards around with better credentials.

Statistics sometimes can be boring, but Jones' stats hardly could be boring to opposing coaches throughout the league. The slim sharpshooter hit 52 per cent from the field last winter and is over the .500 mark throughout his six-year pro career. He's the ABA's third all-time assist leader and is fifth in total points scored in the loop. He is ranked in the top 10 in no fewer than nine ABA career categories.

Basically, wherever you find the red, white and blue ABA ball on the court, it usually is in possession of familiar number 15, James Jones. And as an added salute to his talents, talk to the other guards in the ABA about Jones' trademark, namely play number 41, in which the other four guys clear out for the final shot at the end of a quarter and JJ does his thing, which about 90 per cent of the time is to put the ball in the bottom of the net.

Last year wasn't exactly an off-year for Jones. It is hard to imagine what he can do if he stays healthy.

RON BOONE

One year ago Ron Boone was regarded as the most valuable sixth man in the ABA. He specialized in the spectacular, the unusual. He demoralized the opposition with his unbelievable bag of tricks. Most of the time, Boone, either as a forward or guard, sparked a furious Utah Stars rally.

This year Boone has produced a full 180 degree turn. He's careful. He takes the percentage shot. He passes off more than he shoots. And he worries more about his defense than he does his offense. The difference? This year he's a regular. He has certain duties to perform and they fall within the framework of team play.

Boone gave up the unique number six slot last Jan. 9 when regular guard Glen Combs suffered the dislocation of his right knee. Opportunity knocked for Boone. It can be said that Ron answered the door.

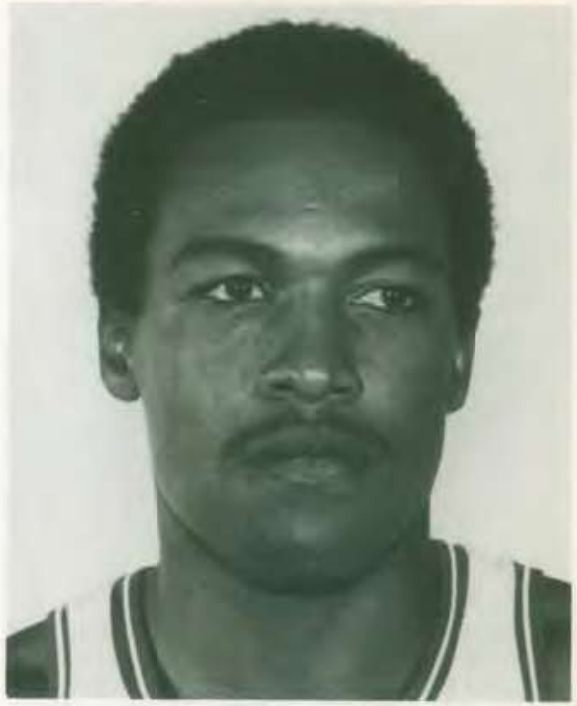
"I enjoyed last season," claims the Booner, "because I felt I became a vital cog. Last year was my best because I played a lot more. I knew I didn't have to get it all done in just a few short minutes. My timing was better, my shooting was more accurate and my floor game improved."

Did Boone make an effort to change his style after the unfortunate accident to Combs?

"Yes, I did," says the Chief. "Coming off the bench as a sub you have to do something to spark the club. You have to accomplish the spectacular. You have to look for the unusual. Now I don't look to do anything that might interrupt the flow, the continuity of the game. Now I try to establish a tempo."

What does the average professional basketball player do in the off season? "I don't play much basketball in the summer," states Boone. "I play a lot of golf and ride my ten-speed bike. I do a bit of running to keep in tone but I try to forget basketball as much as possible. You can get stale if you go all year. The season is long enough as it is."

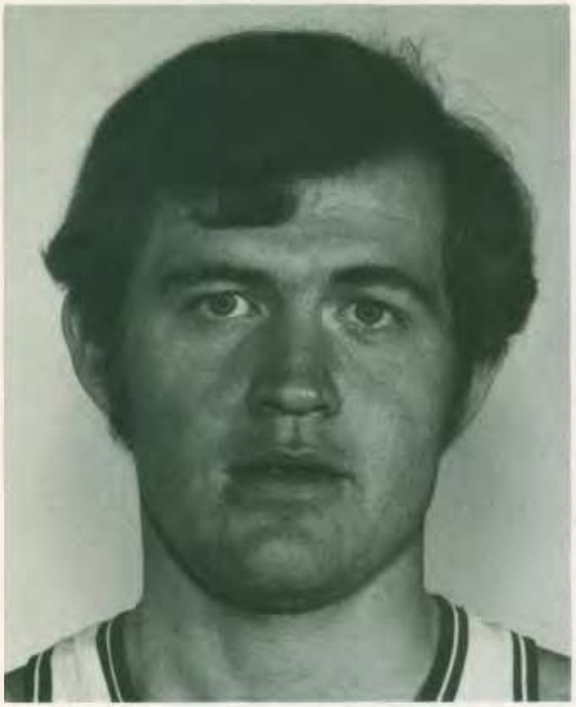
On a serious note, Boone touched on a problem facing all pro athletes. "I am looking for some type of job that will work out for the future when I get too old to get up and down the court. I've worked with the mayor of Omaha for a couple of years in a public relations job.



There might be something there. Perhaps something might work out for me in Salt Lake City some day. I know I'd like that. It's fun playing here. The people are good to us."

One thing Ron Boone is dead certain about. It'll be no political future for him. "I've watched the mayor of Omaha a lot under the stress and strain," laughed Boone. "He's got more problems than a coach! That's not my idea of the great life."

GLEN COMBS



"I have one goal in mind this year," says Glen Combs, "and that is to play 84 games for the Utah Stars."

Perhaps not an unusual quote from a ballplayer but in this case it is slightly out of the ordinary. For four and a half seasons Glen Combs was a model of consistency. When the red, white and blue ball was tossed in the air number 40 was always there. He didn't miss a game. As a matter of fact, the last time Glen missed a basketball game was back in grade school in Carr Creek, Ky. He caught the measles and the country doc in Carr Creek wouldn't let him out of the house.

Last Jan. 9, Combs suffered a dislocated kneecap in a rough and tumble game against the Memphis Tams. The unfortunate accident knocked him out of 34 ABA games. It was an extremely untimely injury for Glen because the curly haired guard was hot on the trail of another banner year in the three-point shooting department. The previous season found Combs establishing a new mark for the home run ball. He became the first player ever to hit over 40 per cent of his three-point bombs. He once nailed 7 of 11 from the 25-foot range. He still wound up last year with his second consecutive ABA home run title.

The durable, eagle-eyed shooter looks at this season with candor. "I spent the summer on weight programs for the knee. I ran a lot of miles, played paddle ball, shot baskets until they turned the lights out," claims the plucky guard, "because I knew I had to if I had hopes of regaining my spot in the lineup. The knee is strong, stronger than the other one really. I am in better shape this year than I've been in my entire career, and I've never been one to allow myself to go soft in the off-season. I'm deadly serious about this problem and I feel real good."

What kind of a club will Joe Mullaney put on the floor this year? "You are going to see some new wrinkles under Mullaney this year," vows Combs. "He will establish a defensive attitude first on this team and then you'll see some changes in style on offense. We'll be tough again this year, but I doubt that any one club, including us, will dominate the ABA. There's too much balance around the league now."

Other veterans on the Stars recognize the talents of Glen Combs and the importance the loss of Combs last year played in the overall picture. "With Combs in the lineup," says Willie Wise, "we have that great outside threat. Without Combs, the other clubs just sag and clog up the middle. I know I was a lot more effective inside when the threat was there."

GERALD GOVAN

"I got married Aug. 25," grins big Gerald Govan, "and now I really have to go to work and make a living. I have some responsibilities to take care of now."

Big "Go" has a worried look this year, like any other husband. Go's worries might be a bit different, however, since they revolve around people like George McGinnis, Julius Erving, Billy Cunningham, etc. Defense is the name of the game for Govan and when you talk about those superstars, you talk about an almost impossible task.

"I don't have too many individual goals," claims the angular forward, "except to play better defense and do a lot better on the boards. I always hope to improve on my shot making but I guess I'm not a Willie Wise is that department. I want to be more careful on shot selection, though."

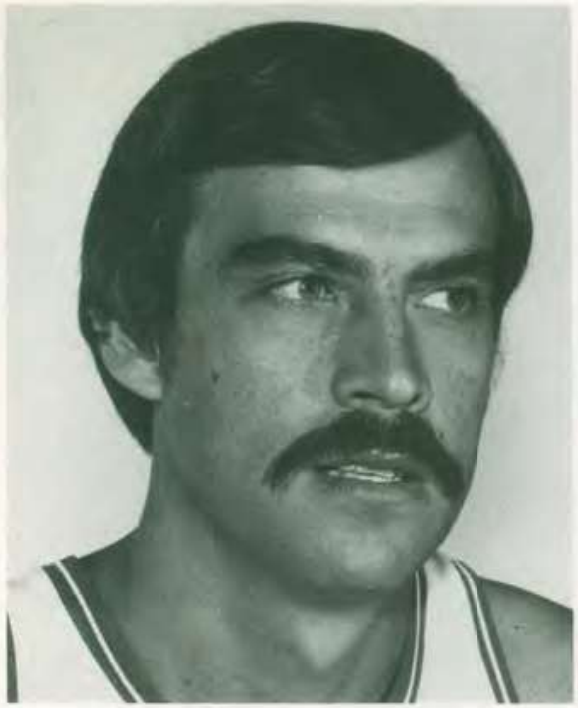
The irrepressible Wise, overhearing that remark, chimed in, "Yeah, old Go is only going to shoot layups this year." In a serious note Wise added a professional critique on his fellow cornerman. "Gerald is a definite asset to this club. He is a solid rebounder . . . that's why all of us on the team were under the double figure mark in rebound average last year. Everytime I went up for the ball, I couldn't get it away from Govan," laughs the good-natured Wise. "Also, Govan is a great passer. He was fourth on the club in total assists and his assist-error ratio was better than the other three."

"I take a lot of kidding from the guys about my shooting," says the pride of Jersey City, "but old 'Go' is improving. I'm hitting my free throws better than I did when I was with Memphis. Of course every free throw is vitally more important over here on the Stars."

What about Joe Mullaney, new coach of the Stars? "There's no doubt he has great basketball knowledge. All we have to do is what he wants us to and if we can accomplish that we'll be all right. I like his emphasis on defense, probably because I'm a defensive player. Defense is the key to winning and that's what it's all about."

Gerald Govan is regarded by his mates as a solid pro and a smart player. How about coaching in the future? "I'd like to coach someday," claims Govan. "I have definite ideas about coaching. I don't think any one coach can be called original. We all borrow from someone along the line, but I'd still like to give it a try someday. I still have a few more years as a player, but when the time comes, I'd like to have a shot at coaching in college or professionally. I think I would prefer the pros because that's what I really dig now. But who's to know?"

JOHN BEASLEY



"I like to play inside," drawls big John Beasley, "but if Coach Mullaney wants me to work in the corners, that's okay too."

What a difference a couple of years makes. In the early years of the ABA John Beasley was an all-star performer. Beasley was a top flight star with the Dallas club and in 1969 was named the most valuable player in the ABA mid-season all-star game.

From that stratispheric peak, it's tough to reconcile oneself to a spot on the bench.

That's the problem that confronted Beasley when he was traded by Dallas to the talent-rich Utah Stars. Beasley overcame that problem to the point where he now is regarded as a fixture as a valuable swing man. "Beez" is a professional. As such, he gets the job done when called upon. Two years ago he had to replace Red Robbins in the tough playoff series when the Redhead fell victim to a virus. Last year he was a tower of strength as the backup man for Zelmo Beaty.

Beasley still has his goals for this season though it is true that he no longer has sights set on the all-star game or the league scoring title. He once was a consistent contender for both of those awards. "First I want to help this club win a title," claims the big man from Texas, "because that's what it's all about. Then I want to improve even more on my defense. I also want to improve on my rebounding. I did pretty well considering I averaged only 13 minutes a game, but I want to do better. I feel that I will."

How about the problems of a swing man? Is it difficult to play two positions, often in the same game?

"I guess I've had enough experience. I played forward and center in college and I did the same thing at Dallas and that's what I have to here. I'm a pro, I should be able to play either spot, asserts Beez. "I like to play center because I like to rebound. I get good shots in either situation. I like to shoot deep or in close. It's no problem."

There's no doubt that Beasley can shoot. He led the good shooting Stars in two-point accuracy, 56%. He led the club in free throw shooting with 88%. And he's the first center in ABA history to rank among league leaders in three-point shooting.

BOB WARREN

The average fan has an image of what a professional basketball player is like. Most of it centers around the New York type, like Walt Frazier of the New York Knicks, or a Bill Bradley of the same club. You know, the big city guy . . . the sophisticate. Dinner at Antoine's . . . an evening at Toot Shor's.

Well, pro basketball has its country cousins, too. There's Jerry West who came from the hills of West Virginia; and there's Bob Warren, proud owner of a hog farm outside the friendly, little town of Hardin, Ky. Warren's idea of a night out is a leisurely drive to town and dinner in the local supper club. Compare the dinner tab to a posh club in New York and you'll begin to see why country living is called "the good life."

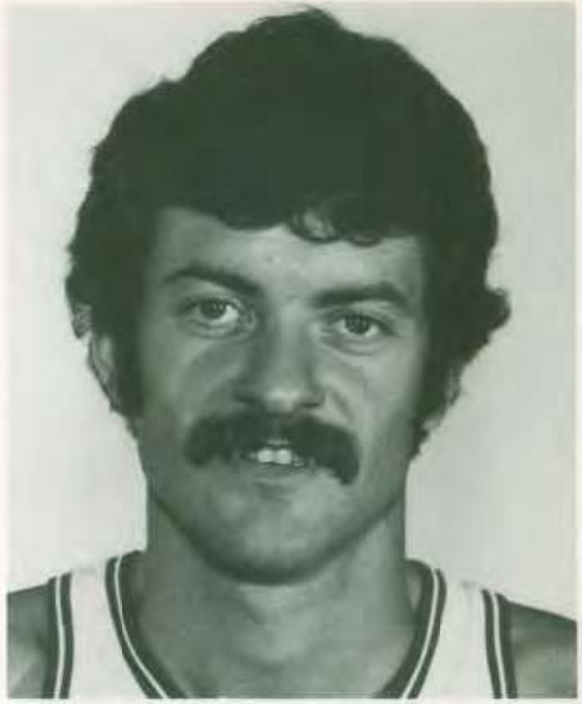
"I was raised on a farm," explains the personable Warren, "and of course a lot of guys can't see why I like it. Once you've lived that kind of life, it gets in your blood and you can't get it out. I enjoy the country and I'm going back to it when I'm through as a player.

"I've worked hard this past summer," reminisces Bob, "and I don't ever remember enjoying a summer more than that one. Now I'm looking forward to another basketball season and I think the hard, physical work helped me get ready. I was up early with the sun every morning. I ran a lot to keep my wind. And I played a bit of basketball in town at the high school gym.

"I regard basketball as a means to an end," claims Warren. "I know I can't play forever so I want each season to be a good one. It has provided me and my wife a good living and it has provided us a chance to invest in the future with our land acquisitions in Kentucky. I just don't want to stay in the game forever as a coach.

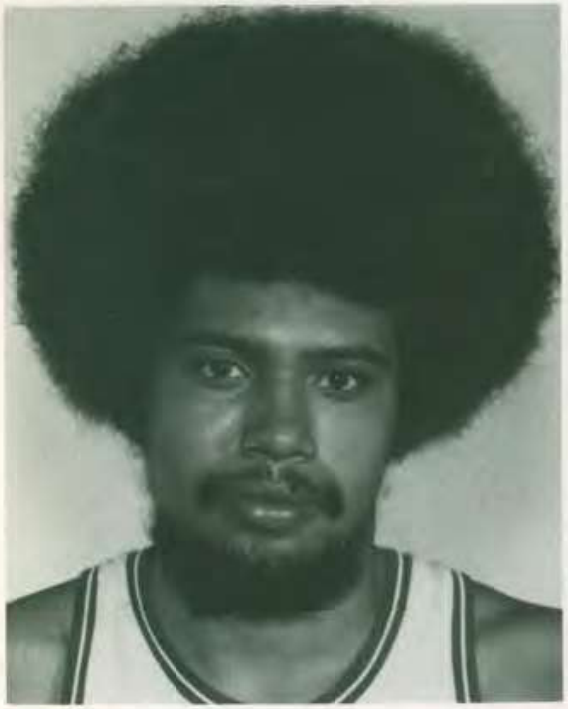
"I thought about coaching at one time," says Warren, "but I don"t want to ever have to tell a guy he can't play. I don't want to cut him. Other men can do it — I've known some great coaches — but I just don't have the personality to coach. It's not for me . . . period!"

What about the Stars chances this year? "You're going to see a good looking team on the court this year." We'll be better. We'll be a stronger defensive team. Mullaney really places a lot of emphasis on that department of the game."



Warren touched on the strong suit of the veteran, experienced club. "We are as deep as any team I've seen in pro basketball. We have four experienced guards, Govan and Beaty at center, Willie, Jackson and a flock of rookies at forward. And don't forget that both Beasley and Boone can swing to forward if the need arises. We're going to be a solid club. There's no way we won't be a contender all winter."

MIKE JACKSON



"Man, am I glad that rookie year is over and done with," exclaims huge, amiable Mike Jackson. "It was the toughest year of my life."

Mike Jackson, six feet-seven inches and 230 pounds, looks like he'd be at home in a steel mill or lumber camp . . . or perhaps as a defensive lineman for a pro football team. Instead, he's a center-forward for the Utah Stars. The strongman from California State College of Los Angeles has a lot of potential. He has great jumping ability, is a good percentage shooter and likes to mix it up under the basket.

Getting back to the winter of discontent, Jackson's pleasure over his status as a veteran ballplayer is not a reflection on his play of a year ago as much as it is a lack of play. The big guy saw little action last winter on a club that was dominated by years of experience from the likes of Zelmo Beaty, Willie Wise, Gerald Govan, Cincy Powell and John Beasley.

Jackson was the only rookie on the club. He didn't even have a rookie partner to commiserate with on those long, trying road trips . . . or share the duties that befall the rookies on any pro team.

"It's a shock to the ego to have to carry somebody's bag, the movie projector or the basketballs," voiced the Washington, D. C. native, "especially after you've been the big man on campus for your college team. I didn't argue, though" chuckled Jackson. "No way I'd argue with Willie, Zelmo or any of those guys."

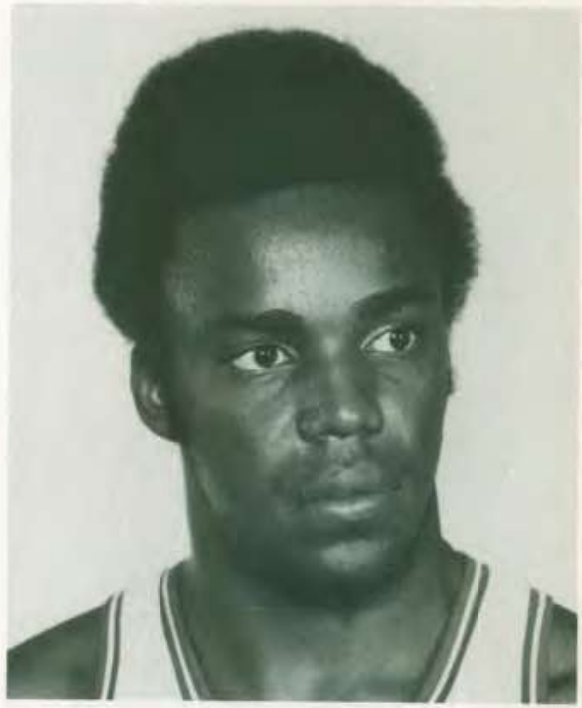
"I'm ready for a good year," claims the second year pro. "I came to camp about 15 pounds lighter than I was at the end of last season. I gained weight last winter; finished at about 250. Man, I thought the Redskins might draft me. This year I want to play a lot more. I think I can get the job done. I played in a couple of summer leagues during the off-season around home against some of the ABA-NBA guys. It helped."

Obviously playing time is a vital factor in a pro's game. In college Jackson was a superb 60 per cent shooter. He averaged 19.7 over a two-year span and pulled down an average of 13.4 rebounds per contest. Those statistics were compiled with a playing average of almost 40 minutes a game. With the Stars, the big guy averaged only six minutes a game. At that, he appeared in only 30 games of an 84-game schedule.

Jackson made certain that people noticed him on the court on those rare occasions he made an appearance, especially the referees. He pulled down a couple of boards while mixing it up, scored a few points, handed out a few bumps and bruises and accumulated personal fouls at a fantastic pace.

"I love to play," explains Jackson, "and it's frustrating to sit on the bench. This year I want to prove that I can play against the guys in this league."

RONNIE ROBINSON



The Stars for the first time this year since their move to Utah accomplished the feat of signing their number one collegiate draft choice.

He is Ronnie Robinson of Memphis State University, a player who led his team into the finals of the NCAA Championships last spring against the mighty UCLA Bruins.

A 6-9, 220-pounder nicknamed "Big Cat" for his graceful, quick moves on a basketball court, Ronnie was a three-year All-Missouri Valley Conference selection. During his college career in the tough MVC, Robinson averaged 13.8 points and 12.8 rebounds in 83 games.

He could have been a higher scorer, but performed for a team which played a slow-down offense and took the good shots only, hitting a phenomenal 58 per cent from the field during his career.

It was as a rebounder that he was most outstanding, leading the MVC as both a sophomore and junior in this important department.

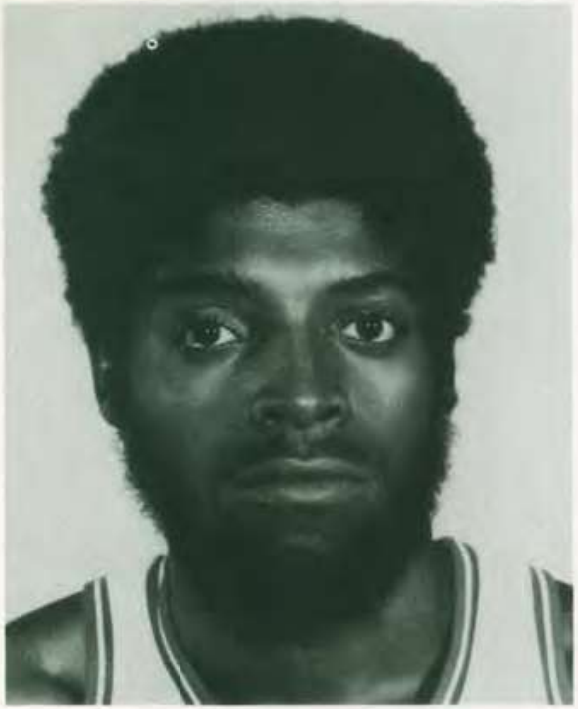
Ronnie accomplished a feat no other Memphis State player in history ever achieved by surpassing the 1,000 mark in both career points and rebounds. He wound up with 1150 points and 1066 rebounds.

Early this summer Robinson captained the United States all-star squad which played a series of eight games in China. Playing only about half of each game as the Americans posted eight easy victories, Ronnie was the team's leading rebounder and third best scorer.

His college coach who also coached the U.S. team on that tour, Gene Bartow, calls Robinson "a can't miss pro prospect." Bartow says of his former ace performer: "I'm very high on him. He is one of the top rebounders in the country, one of the real fine percentage shooters in the game and is awfully good defensively against players his own size."

Robinson's collegiate statistics weren't as good during his senior season as they were as a sophomore and junior, but Bartow explained that the presence of Larry Kenon (New York Nets) made a big difference, particularly on the boards where the two were battling each other for the ball, as well as the opposition.

ROY EBRON



It is unfortunate that the Indiana Pacers coined the phrase "Dr. Dunk" a couple of seasons ago when Darnell Hillman broke into the ABA.

The Utah Stars have their own version of a man who specializes in slam dunks, reverse twist dunks and any other form of putting a ball through a basket from zero launching point.

His name is Roy Ebron, a 6-9, 225-pounder from Southwestern Louisiana University, and even though his class hasn't graduated as yet, it appears he was a Phi Beta Kappa scholar in the art of dunking.

Ebron, a mainstay on the past three USL teams which have compiled a 73-12 won-lost record, found himself without a team to play for in his upcoming senior season when the Ragin' Cajuns were rapped with the tougest probation ever meted out by the NCAA. USL for two years cannot have a basketball program for all intents and purposes.

A robust 21-year-old, Ebron was considered one of the top collegiate offensive rebounders in the country. During his three-year career at Southwestern Louisiana spanning 87 games he averaged 12.2 boards while scoring at a 19.3 clip. He possesses a fine shooting eye as evidenced by a career shooting percentage of .579.

His best year was as a sophomore in 1971-72 when he averaged 23.0 points and 14.2 rebounds and shot .610 from the field.

A native of Norfolk, Va., where he was a prep sensation at Booker T. Washington high school, Ebron at Southwestern Louisiana was not as ballyhooed as high scoring teammate Dwight Lamar, but followers of the team felt he was the more valuable performer in leading the Cajuns into NCAA tournament play the past two campaigns.

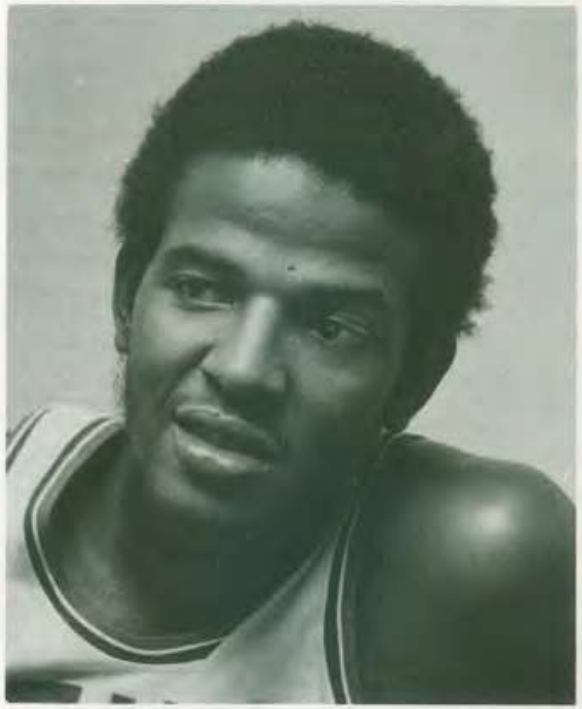
What role Ebron will play in his rookie pro season with the Stars is primarily up to how rapidly he adjusts to the pro game, but it is no great secret that the Stars have been looking for three years for a promising young center or a muscular forward to team with quick Willie Wise. Ebron could fill the bill at either spot.

RINGTHEBELL on Archive.org

There also is a possibility Ebron could develop into the power forward the team needs to team with quick Willie Wise.

One thing is for sure: If Roy applies the sensational physical tools he obviously possesses, new Stars' coach Joe Mullaney will provide him with every available opportunity "to do his thing."

BRUCE SEALS



"He's an extremely quick player with good size. He can shoot it well from outside. He has the ability to pass off and rebound and even though he hasn't been tested we feel he can learn to play solid defense. He has the potential to develop into a pro star."

Those are the words of Utah Stars general manager Arnie Ferrin two weeks after the start of training camp when he announced that 6-9, 210 - pound, 20 - year - old forward Bruce Seals inked his name to a Stars' contract.

Just 24 hours later Seals had Ferrin cheering him on as he scored 16 points in an 18-minute pre-season appearance against the Denver Rockets. He showed he wasn't afraid to throw the ball up as he fired 10 times from two-point range and once from the three-point territory and he hit on six two-pointers and was successful on the one homerun cast.

Seals was selected by the Stars last April in the first round of supplemental drafts following the regular drafting of college seniors. He has played two seasons of college ball at Xavier University in New Orleans.

As a freshman in 1971-72 he was an NAIA All-American honorable mention choice after leading his team to a 21-4 regular season won-lost record and a berth in the NAIA tournament. He averaged 18.7 points and 12.2 rebounds while shooting .529 from the field.

He followed up that excellent first year with an absolutely sensational campaign in 1972-73. He won NAIA All-American first-team honors by averaging 25.6 points and 13.7 rebounds. The Gold Rush posted a 19-5 record to again qualify for an NAIA tourney berth.

In the tournament he was the outstanding player, making the all-tournament team and winding up as the third leading scorer even though Xavier was eliminated in three games and the rest of the scoring leaders played in five contests. He tallied 88 points in the three games, a 29.3 average, and hauled in 43 rebounds, a 14.3 norm, while shooting .539 from the field.

His two-year college statistics spanning 53 regular-season and post-season tournament games were 1178 points for a 22.2 average, 688 rebounds for a 13.0 median and a .520 percentage from the field.

73-74 PROSPECTUS

The 1973-74 Utah Stars will present a new look to their fans, but it is hoped that even with some changes the club will continue to be successful as it has been for the past three seasons.

The new look begins with coach Joe Mullaney, a man who in 19 impressive years of coaching in the colleges and pros has some strong theories about how the game should be played, particularly on the defensive end of the court.

For the first time in the three-plus years the Stars have been in Utah they are beginning the season with three rookies and all figure heavily in the team's plans.

It is conceivable that any of the trio of Ronnie Robinson, the club's number one draft choice out of Memphis State; Roy Ebron of Southwestern Louisiana; and Bruce Seals of Xaxier of New Orleans could break into the starting lineup by season's end. All are rugged big men standing 6-9.

The brunt of the load will be shouldered by familiar veteran performers such as Zelmo Beaty, Willie Wise, James Jones, Ron Boone, Gerald Govan, Glen Combs, Bob Warren, John Beasley and Mike Jackson.

Beaty, a 10-year veteran of the pro cage wars in both the NBA (St. Louis and Atlanta Hawks) and ABA, gives the Stars the solid (6-9, 235) man in the pivot.

Wise's emergence as a superstar in just four pro seasons is particularly signifcant when it is considered he hooked on with the old LA Stars as a virtual unknown after being overlooked in the ABA draft. "Wondrous Willie" is a 6-6 forward with all the moves and a burning desire to excel at all phases of the game.

Jones, a 6-4 six-year vet of the ABA out of Grambling College, has been with the Stars the past two campaigns and this past year became the first Utah player to be named to the all-ABA first team.

Boone, a 6-2 bundle of exploding energy, enjoyed his best pro campaign in five last year, finishing as the Stars' second-leading scorer with an 18.5 norm while shooting .507 from the field and .866 from the charity lane. An extremely durable performer, Boone since breaking into the ABA in 1968-69 never has missed a game, putting together a consecutive streak of 468 appearances.

Govan, the tallest Utah player at 6-10, isn't reputed for his scoring ability, but is the ABA's second all-time rebounding leader and plays tough defense. He can play both forward and center.

Combs is a 6-2 guard with fantastic outside shooting ability as evidenced by his leading the ABA in three-point bombing the past two seasons.

Warren, a 6-5 guard, and Beasley, a 6-9 center-forward, provided the Stars with exceptional bench strength last season. In the last 25 games down the stretch when the Stars were winning the ABA western division championship they combined for 24 points-per-game while shooting a red-hot 53% from the field.

Jackson, a 6-7 forward-center who saw very limited action in 30 games as a rookie last year, was one of the more pleasant surprises of this year's training camp. He will begin the season as a starter and many performances like his 18-point, 9-rebound effort against the Boston Celtics will keep him there.

ADMINISTRATIVE STAFF

BILL DANIELS

This past September the owner of the Utah Stars, Bill Daniels, found himself in a most unusual situation.

In recognition for his generous assistance to others, which is his chief goal in life, Daniels was honored by an award from the Cenikor Foundation at its 1973 Humanitarian Benefit Dinner.

This organization was conceived by a former convict who recognized his addiction to drugs threatened his psychic destruction and endangered the well-being of others. The convict found a solution for himself and hope for others when he gathered together in the Colorado State Pentitentiary in Canon City a small group of other prisoners with the purpose of helping each other to rehabilitate themselves.

Daniels, one of the first supporters of the Cenikor Foundation, was honored for the encouragement he has given to inmates at the penitentiary, and with equal importance, the help he has given many of them in starting a new life after their release.

While such an honor is deeply appreciated by Daniels, he seeks no personal recognition for his deeds. However, sports fans in Utah and Colorado might consider some type of award for Daniels for the high quality sports entertainment he has provided for them.

This enthusiastic sportsman has given Utah the Stars, one of the top franchises in all of professional basketball. He has given Colorado heavyweight boxers Ron Lyle and Duane Bobick, the former named 1972 "Fighter of the Year" by the World Boxing Association and the latter an up-and-coming youngster with great promise.

But getting even a bigger thrill out of his sports interests is Daniels himself, who has instilled his own secret for success in the Stars and his fighters.

This is not to imply that Daniels interferes in the operation of his sports enterprises. As a matter of fact, the exact opposite is true.

"Many sports owners place themselves above the actual sport. Some of them will purchase a team and begin to run it entirely by themselves. For some reason, they think they've become professional coaches and managers. It's the owner's duty to provide the club with professional help. The owner has two great responsibilities: one to the athletes who play for him, and two to the general public."

Daniels' major field of endeavor is cable television. He pioneered the first cable TV broadcast back in 1952 and now is president of the Denver-based firm, Daniels and Associates, Inc., which operates cable systems in California, Texas, Colorado and Wyoming.

The combination of cable TV with his sports interests as well as his recent entrance into politics as Republican National Committeeman from Colorado makes him an extremely active individual.

VINCE BORYLA

He refers to himself as "a dumb Polack just trying to get by in life," while in reality he's one of the most brilliant sports administrators in the country.

That's Vince Boryla, congenial president of the Utah Stars, who has come close to performing the unbelievable in guiding the destiny of this professional sports franchise the past three-plus years.

Retained by Bill Daniels several years ago to operate his boxing interests under the heading of Mountain States Sports Incorporated, Boryla decided to get involved providing professional basketball would be part of that operation.

Basketball came under the MSSI banner in March of 1970 when Daniels took over the struggling Los Angeles Stars and under the expert leadership of Boryla turned the club into an instant winner.

Barely qualifying for a playoff berth by winning 17 of their last 21 games, the cinderella LA Stars upset Dallas and Denver in the 1970 playoffs and extended the Indiana Pacers to six games in the championship finals.

Shifting the franchise to Utah during the summer of 1970, the Stars in their first year in a new location won the ABA championship, a feat never before accomplished by any major league franchise in any sport.

The Stars have gone on to post two more divisional titles the last two campaigns, winning over 60 games for three consecutive seasons, the only ABA team ever to achieve such outstanding success.

Behind it all has been Boryla who has not been afraid to wheel and deal. As evidence of his acumen when it comes to trading for talented personnel, analyze the Stars' roster which includes a Jimmy Jones, a Ron Boone, a Glen Combs, a Gerald Govan and others, all obtained through trades with other ABA teams — all engineered by Boryla. And it hasn't been easy to maintain the type of coaching the Stars have had. Boryla replaced Bill Sharman with LaDell Andersen and now Joe Mullaney is calling the shots for the club.

The sport of basketball has been more than a game, more than an occupation for the brilliant Stars' prexy. He has literally eaten, slept, lived and breathed basketball since his days as a youngster growing up in East Chicago, Ind.

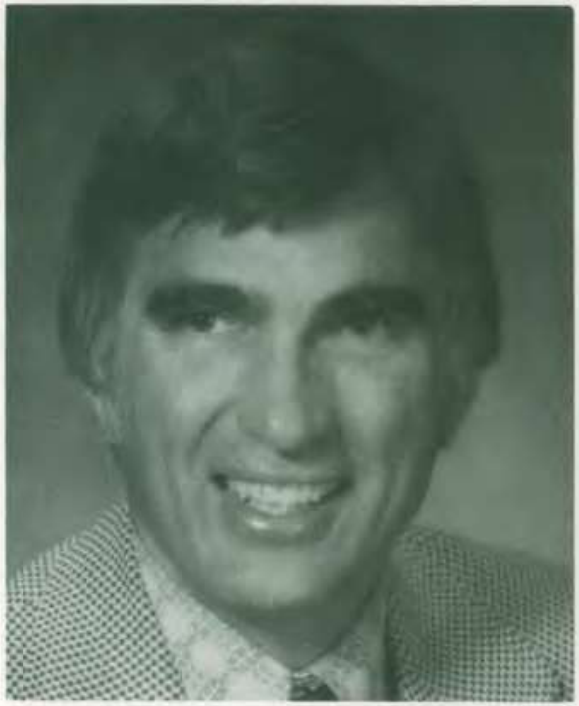
He holds the distinction of being the only player ever to be named All-American at two different universities—Notre Dame and Denver.

Vince spent a decade in the NBA, gaining the respect of his contemporaries as a player, coach and general manager of the New York Knicks.

ARNIE FERRIN



When he accepted the position of general manager of the Utah Stars in May, 1972, in all probability Arnie Ferrin had no conception of the gargantuan task he was undertaking.

In addition to being responsible for the day-to-day operation of the club which entails financial negotiations with players, scheduling, travel arrangements, sale of tickets and advertising, promotional programs, meeting a budget, etc., etc., Ferrin last year was the man in charge of all planning and staging of the ABA All-Star game and the highly successful "Shoot for the Stars" competition for youngsters. And in his spare time he has been travelling around the country scouting future pro prospects and signing them to contracts.

But Ferrin, a native of Ogden who was one of the all-time basketball greats in the state of Utah, is not afraid of challenges.

Arnie was a four-time All-American at the University of Utah, the first year as a freshman in 1944 when he won NCAA most valuable player honors as Utah's "Cinderella" quintet won the national championship.

In 1945 as a sophomore he was the Newspaper Enterprise Association's collegiate basketball player of the year.

After spending a year in the Armed Forces, Arnie in 1947 was runner-up for MVP honors as the Redskins won the National Invitational Tournament in New York's Madison Square Garden.

He concluded a sensational collegiate career in 1948 by being chosen the most valuable player in the College All-Star game.

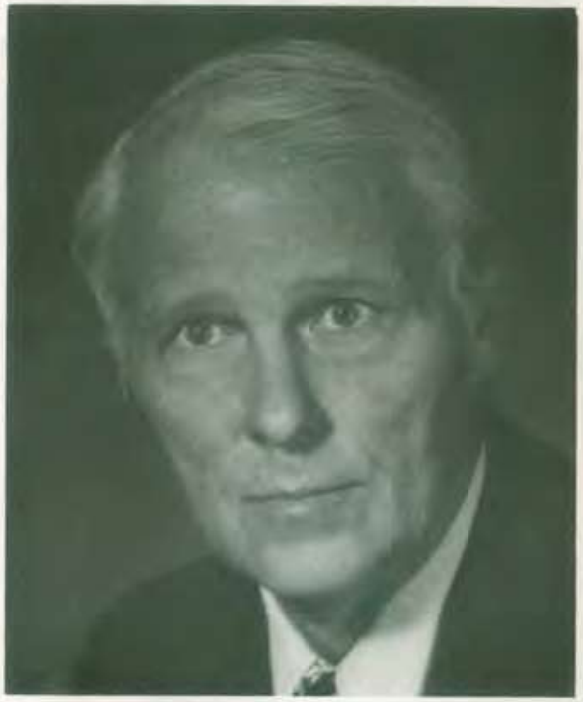
Arnie joined the Minneapolis Lakers of the NBA and as a rookie played for the 1948-49 league championship club. The Lakers and Arnie took down another NBA crown in 1950-51.

Ferrin has maintained an involvement with athletics, serving as a member of the Athletic Council at the University of Utah and doing radio color work for U. of U. football and basketball broadcasts.

For the two years prior to accepting his post with the Stars, Ferrin served as Director of Regional Programs for the University of Utah Alumni Association. In this position he was responsible for effecting liaison between the University and its many alumni chapters throughout the country.

One of Ferrin's top assets is his rapport with the citizenry of Utah. Basketball and Arnie Ferrin are synonymous in the Beehive state.

JOE MULLANEY



Joe Mullaney, for the past two years the coach of the Kentucky Colonels of the ABA, becomes the third head coach of the Utah Stars. He is in his 20th season as a basketball coach, and he's been fabulously successful — posting an overall record of 558 victories against only 244 defeats, a superb .696 winning percentage.

In his first season with Kentucky in 1971-72 Mullaney won more games (68) than any man in ABA history. In the process he experienced fewer defeats (16) and had the greatest winning percentage (.805) in league history.

What's more, he accomplished these things in his first venture in the ABA, although he's far from being a rookie. On the contrary. He brings credentials to his new position that are difficult to mach.

Joe entered the coaching profession in 1954 at Norwich College and compiled an 18-5 record his first year. He then accepted the coaching job at tiny Providence College in 1955. At the time, Providence basketball was just a step above the intramural program.

What Mullaney accomplished there boggles the mind. He compiled a 293-99 record in 14 seasons for a fine perecntage of .752 which placed him third behind Kentucky's Adolph Rupp and UCLA's John Wooden among coaches of that period. It included nine consecutive 20-victory seasons, nine straight post-season tournaments and two NIT championships.

From Providence, Joe went to the Los Angeles Lakers of the NBA. In his first try at coaching in the pro ranks in 1969-70, he guided the Lakers to a 46-36 regular-season record and to playoff victories over the Phoenix Suns and Atlanta Hawks. His club advanced all the way to the seventh game of the championship series before losing to the cinderella New York Knicks.

In 1970-71 the Lakers under Mullaney won the NBA Pacific Division title with a 48-34 record, knocked off the Chicago Bulls in the first round of the playoffs, but lost to the eventual NBA champion Milwaukee Bucks in the Western Conference finals.

Joe moved to the ABA in 1971-72 and posted the aforementioned 68-16 mark with a team considered still in the formative stages. The Colonels last year didn't do as well in regular-season play, finishing a game behind the Carolina Cougars in the eastern division standings with a 56-28 record, but in the playoffs defeated both the Virginia Squires and Carolina before extending the Indiana Pacers to seven games in the championship finals.

STAFF ASSISTANTS

LARRY CREGER

Director of Player Personnel
Assistant Coach

If dedication and hard work are the keys to success, Larry Creger is one of the more successful guys around.

A most capable coach with a fine eye for basketball talent, Creger spends long hours on the road scouting future pro prospects.

Larry is a native of Iowa and a graduate of Simpson College in Indianola. He was a high school coach for seven years in Iowa, guiding his clubs to four conference championships. He then moved on to southern California where he coached three more seasons.

He worked as a part-time coach with the old LA Stars for two years, prior to joining the Stars full-time when they made the switch to Utah.

HOWARD ADAMS

Trainer-Traveling Secretary

Coming to the Stars two years ago, along with head coach LaDell Andersen, was trainer Howard Adams, a man who worked in the same capacity at Utah State with Andersen.

Adams is a native of Murray and a graduate of Murray high school. He attended Utah State, graduating in 1965.

He has held positions with the Oakland Raiders pro football team, with the College of San Mateo in California and with Salt Lake Golden Eagles pro hockey club.

Adams has a fine rapport with the athletes he treats, and excels in the prevention and treatment of injuries.

During the off-season Adams assists the Stars' front office in the sale of tickets and advertising.

BILL HOWARD

Director of Communications

A real pro behind the mike, Bill Howard has called the play-by-play of every Utah Stars game since the club's inception in 1970.

The Voice of the Stars is held in high esteem by fellow members of the broadcast media in Utah, having won the state's "Sportscaster of the Year" award six times.

Howard came to Utah in 1964 as sports director of KUTV and KALL, but left for a year to handle broadcasting duties for the San Diego Rockets of the NBA.

A native of Omaha, Nebraska, Bill is a graduate of Creighton University. He worked for 10 years in Green Bay, Wisc.

Bill also coordinates all public speaking appearances for the Stars.

FRONT OFFICE

HARVEY KIRKPATRICK, public relations director, is a graduate of the University of Denver and served as sports information director at his alma mater and Utah State University.

GRANT HARRISON, director of sales and promotions, is a Salt Lake City native, having graduated from Olympus high school and the University of Utah.

JERRY BROWN, controller, is from Manti, Utah, and graduated from Brigham Young University. Prior to joining the Stars, he worked in California.

VALENE ADAMSON, executive secretary, is a Salt Lake native, a graduate of South High School. She worked previously with the U.S. government.

MARY RUNGE, receptionist, is the newest member of the Stars' staff and like the other two girls in the office also graduated from Salt Lake's South High School. She was previously associated with the Golden Eagles hockey team.

DARLENE MORAN, accounting clerk, also is from Salt Lake City where she attended South High. She came to the Stars from a position with a local drug firm.

"May it rest in peace."

So went the eulogy from skeptic NBA owners and followers when it was announced six years ago last February that an upstart professional basketball league was going to commence play that fall under the American Basketball Association banner.

While a couple of owners from the brown-ball league still refuse to admit an error in judgment and continue to proclaim the death of the "other league," the ABA enters its seventh season of operation healthier and more determined than ever.

The ABA has had super success in signing draft choices — Larry Kenon, Dwight Lamar, Swen Nater, Bird Averitt, Ronnie Robinson, Roy Ebron, Bruce Seals, Mike Green, Barry Parkhill and Kevin Joyce — just to name a few.

But possibly the most forward-looking move taken by the league was the naming of Mike Storen as sixth commissioner of the ABA.

Without utilizing trite news releases, let's quote from the Sept. 17,

1973, issue of Sports Illustrated magazine:

". . . At Indiana and Kentucky he (Storen) proved himself one of the best front-office men in basketball. He built the Pacers and Colonels into quality teams that would surely be economically successful in a merged pro league. His forcefulness in ABA councils in the early years is credited with keeping the young league alive. . . .

"The NBA should observe Storen carefully. Its own commissioner, Walter Kennedy, retires in 1975. If the anticipated merger of the league precedes Kennedy's retirement, the NBA might find it wise to swallow its pride and accept the man from the ABA as first commissioner of all pro basketball."

Enough said?

The Cougars under ABA coach-of-the-year Larry Brown and player-of-the-year Billy Cunningham are coming off the best year in history and should have another super campaign. They picked up young center Jim Chones from the New York Nets to team with a flock of tested veterans — Joe Caldwell, Tom Owens, Ed Manning, Mack Calvin, Steve Jones, Gene Littles and Ted McClain.

Coach Alex Hannum in his first two years with the Rockets has improved the team greatly and now feels his club will be in contention for championship honors. In veterans Warren Jabali, Ralph Simpson and Al Smith he has one of the finest backcourts in the game. Rookie Mike Green should bolster a strong frontline featuring musclemen Dave Robisch, Julius Keye, Byron Beck, Willie Long and Marv Roberts.

With two straight ABA championships under their belts it figures the Pacers won't be making a lot of personnel changes. Mel Daniels, George McGinnis, Darnell Hillman and Roger Brown are awesome up front and Donnie Freeman, Freddie Lewis, Billy Keller, Don Buse and Larry Cannon pace a heady backcourt corps. And not to be forgotten is the leadership provided by coach Bobby Leonard.

KENTUCKY COLONELS

Executive Inn
Louisville, Ky. 40213
Phone: 502+366-5676

The dean of ABA coaches, Babe "Magnolia Mouth" McCarthy, inherits an all-woman board of directors, but he no doubt is more impressed with Artis Gilmore and Dan Issel, two of the premier performers in the pro game. Other vets back from last year's ABA runnerup Colonels include Walt Simon and Wendell Ladner up front and Louie Dampier, Rick Mount and Mike Gale in the backcourt.

MEMPHIS TAMS

Mid-South Coliseum
Memphis, Tenn. 38104
Phone: 901+272-3031

New coach Bill van Breda Kolff moves over from the NBA to try to improve the fortunes of Charlie Finley's Tams. He inherits a top-notch backcourt in George Thompson and Johnny Neumann and a strong young center in Randy Denton. Other top returnees include Wilbert Jones, John Baum, Lee Davis and George Lehmann. Top rookie hopeful is Larry Finch.

NEW YORK NETS

One Old Country Road
Carle Place, N. Y. 11514
Phone: 516+294-6400

The Nets suffered last year after losing Rick Barry to the NBA, but have to be the most improved club in the ABA this year with the acquisition of league scoring leader Julius "Doctor J" Erving. New coach Kevin Loughrey is loaded with talent in the form of veterans Billy Paultz, Tom Washington, Bill Melchionni, Brian Taylor and John Roche and rookies Larry. Kenon, Billy Schaeffer and Neil Jorgenson.

Conquistador owner Leonard Bloom pulled off a super move when he lured Wilt Chamberlain away from the NBA. The courts may rule Wilt can't play this year, but if he does it could be Katie-Bar-the-Door for the rest of the ABA. Wilt the coach inherits veterons Stew Johnson, Red Robbins, Gene Moore, Chuck Williams and Larry Miller; has outstanding rookie prospects Dwight Lamar and Tim Bassett.

Virginia coach Al Bianchi seems to thrive on adversity. This is the third year in a row he's had to pick up the pieces after losing a superstar. First it was Rick Barry, then Charlie Scott, and now it's Julius Erving. Rookies Swen Nater and Barry Parkhill and George Carter and Cincy Powell, obtained from New York and Utah, will join vets Jim Eakins, George Irvine, George Gervin, Roland Taylor and Mike Barr.
